Nothing has been changed since then, though a major restoration project was began in 1986. Lianzuoshan (Mt. Lianzuo) towers over the Dahan River, and gets its name which means lotus seat from the fact that it is shaped like a lotus flower rising out of the water. One version of its origins states that in 1801, a Hakkanese named Jhong Fangsiyu collected funds to build a temple here. Another story says that the temple was in fact built in 1797 by a man named Jhong Shang. This temple is dedicated to Guanyin, goddess of compassion, but it also Li's ancestors inhabited in Taiwan since 1730s, then moved to Daxi Yuemei (literally, eye brow).
